Sunday Reflection

Green thumbs?

Some of us are born with green thumbs. These blessed souls can make a garden oasis out of the scantiest soil. It's as if they know by instinct the right fertilizer for each plant, as if they have an invisible radar warning them of pests and drought. For those of us whose gardens produce weak and wilting harvests, gardening skills border on the miraculous. We look at an empty flowerbed and see dirt. Gardeners see the same freshly turned soil as riot of colour just waiting to happen.

Thankfully the Master Gardener has a never failing green thumb. He looks at the soil and knows exactly what we need for a bountiful harvest. On the outside a life may seem just dried soil and weak stalks, but God sees the fruit they could bear. We may wonder why God has asked us to carry fertilizer or water to such a barren field, but He knows what is planted there and what He hopes to reap. This week, stop doubting and start scattering the kingdom seeds God has given you. For His immeasurable power causes the miracle of growth in each and every heart, including yours.

Fr. Kevin's Cluttered Desk

I always like it when Jesus uses agricultural images, it takes me back to my roots. It also makes me feel comfortable with my faith.

Growing up on the farm there were so many things that you just took for granted. You planted the seeds and they came up. Nothing special about it. When I planted my first garden on my own, one of the things I read was that you soaked your seeds in water before planting them. But mom had never done that, and we definitely never did that with any of the grains we seeded, and they all came up, so why did it say to soak them? When I asked mom about it, she just said "that was a trick for poor gardeners". Not sure if that was true but I tried soaking and not soaking and I still don't see a difference. Some come up and some don't and don't ask me what the difference in seeds was. Like the story in the scriptures, you planted the seeds and every day they seemed to grow taller and if you did not look for a few days incredible growth could take place.

The other thing we took for granted was "work". There was always work that needed to be done, potatoes to hill, potato bugs to be sprayed. Peas to pick, beans to pick, raspberries to pick, and the list went on. If you wanted to eat, there was work that had to be done, nothing came without a price, or more specifically, work. In 1891 Pope Leo XIII wrote an encyclical on the value and importance of work. Now I must admit as a teenager I would have argued the value of work, but as an adult the idea of value of work has a clearer meaning. Dad used to say, "don't be afraid of hard work", well life is full of hard work, not always physical. Sometimes I would rather be back on the farm working hard physically than some of the mental work one has to do as a priest. My uncle used to remind us that "you might not always see the outcome of your work, but work hard anyway". There were years when he would put in a lot of work seeding and preparing the fields and then lose it all to hail, but you seeded the next year anyway. You grew the grain but rarely did you see what that grain might become, maybe flour, maybe beer, one never knew what might happen to it, but I am pretty sure it went to a good purpose. And then my mom, the convert, "idle hands are the devil's workshop", so get to work and work hard. It will keep you out of trouble. But in my mother's case, it was work hard at all aspects of our lives, spiritual, mental, physical.

Work hard so you have some for giving, some for saving, and some for spending. Work hard and what you need is always there.

Peace Fr. Kevin
